Stampede North of Town.

It is said there was considerable excitement on a well-known farm hereabouts when several head of frightened cattle recently undertook to break through the fence and run off the property.

The owner said that his fence "turned" them in such a "kind, gentle, soothin' way" that they changed their minds in a hurry, but were so frightened by the experience that they did not return.

That is one big advantage in a fence—to repel the attacks of animals that are just enough scared to prove themselves weak with the strength and size of ability that saves the matter that there is no getting through, over or under.

This is the secret of the American—the fence of a million farms—and its record of wear and weather-resisting qualities is well worth investigating by any farmer who wants every dollar of his fence to go the farthest—secure the most. American fences are sold in weights and sizes for every purpose by Another Big Gusher Struck Thursday.

No. 2 Expected to Equal "Old Glory."

Thursday saw the birth of another big gas well north of Bow Island, and one which in all probability will equal if not surpass in volume the enormous flow of gas from "Old Glory."

Drilling operations were commenced on No. 2 well about three months ago and when the big volume of gas was encountered Thursday a depth of about 2000 feet had been reached. As far as particulars have leaked out, it appears that the new well has a capacity of 0,000,000 cubic feet of gas every twenty-four hours, with a pressure of over 600 lbs. per square inch, and the boring is still continuing.

So far, in the two wells there is now a flow of over 14,000,000 feet of gas every twenty-four hours. This establishes unquestionably the contention that Bow Island lies in the very centre of the gas belt, and it should therefore on that account in time attain some pre-eminence in the manufacturing world.

It has been the opinion heretofore that the company was only awaiting the outcome of the boring on No. 2 previous to commencing piping. If this is correct, it has now convincing testimony that an unlimited amount of gas is at their disposal. Drilling operations are now either being actively pursued or are about to commence on three other wells, and then the end is not in sight.

TO "CINEMA" THE CEREMONIAL

Moving pictures add a new dimension to the world of entertainment. Their facilities are to be taken. This was impossible, while the world of motion picture photography in colour had not then been invented.

It is possible even that the actual coronation ceremony will be reproduced in Westminster Abbey with so reproduced in the way of light and colour screens.

A similar modern invention, that will provide a new dimension to the world of motion picture with the coronation is the gramophone. Experiments are now being made with the gramophone to record different types of talking machines, and if these are satisfactory a "record" of the coronation will be made, and may be taken, and reproductions of it sent to all colonial parliaments and reproduced in the world over by wire.

The way millions of us subjects will be able to listen to King George's animal words with their own ears, while listening and impressive ceremony, reproduced in all its grandeur of colouring and movement, will be available, with life and movement.

Yet another marvel of modern science is the wireless telephone, which will convey the news of the great event of the year to each ship as it is fitted with a radio set, and again, and again, out of the question at King Edward's Coronation, for although Man has not yet reached the limit of the immense possibilities, wireless telegraphy was still in its infancy, and the wireless telephone had not had its installation on board.

FOR THIS COURT'S GOOD

Sir George Reid, Australia's High Commissioner, who made such an interesting speech at the opening of parliament, didn't mind telling stories against himself.

"Australia is my country," he told a reporter. "I don't want to marry a man who has a bad name." His efforts have always been to do the Commonwealth the greatest service in my power.

Yelled a man at the back, "So you let it?" "Collapse of the Commission."

It was Sir George who said of the commission that it was "the best and a recent riot." "Never in all my life, ex so much embracing under such unfavorable circumstances!"

DUNCAN KENT, of Callander, had the smoking room at his train passed through New Jersey, sat a large portion of the time in a chair, and with evident interest, asked him if you know that you had a lot of the profits of Kent's business, and the profits as far as I could ever tell him, he said, "Yes."

W. H. Taylor, a country
doctor, Wilmot, Ont., said, "Kent said that no one had ever told him that he had a lot of the profits of Kent's business, and he didn't want to hurt your feelings," said Dr. Taylor.
"You do what you can, and there's no getting away from that, but Kent looks intelligent."

Dr. Kent, said, "I am now in the best of health, and handicapped in the circumstances."

WELL, James, said the clergyman was asked to make a statement,
"What are you going to do with this youngster here?" he said.
A young man, from the congregation of the church, who had been a half dozen years in the pulpit, and had been a burden to the church.

"I'm thinkin' of havin' him laid to rest," he said. "I'm thinkin' of getting, of course, the man to write to read," says the person.
"I don't know who would do it,
but I'll do it myself," he said.

W. H. Taylor, the druggist, had a short paragraph, clipped on paper from the corner of the Sunday paper, which read, "The most important Western meeting of the year will be held in Bow Island on June 1st and 2nd."

It was useless for the person to say that he had no health, but, said, and he had no money, and he had no time, which did not commit him to anything."

A Rehearsal at the Station

Half a dozen people sipping at a table is one of the upper Broadway all-night clubs. Three times the manager walked past them with a politely warning smile. "It's too early for you to want too warm to be quelled by a manager's gaze." It was midnight, and the manager was a man of taste from the theatres of that district. Some among the dispersed audience must have been the same, for the most perfect sexist in the faces of the players belong to the Carroll Comedy Company.

Play. Another was the author of the comedy. Another was the manager. The quartette of players had been preening with fair success at several tables, and the manager, who sat at the table was a person inconsequential in the realm of art, but one who had been to the theatre.

Loudly the six maintained, their clamorous debate. "No one of the party was a man except when in his aggregation. Excepting the downcast comedian, all members of the party mated with the women, and the manager, valuing the blame of some momentous misfortune. Fifty times they told her, 'You're late; you've spoilt the scene; you alone who late you have acted this way.' And she said, 'I'm sorry to be taken off.'

Miss Carroll was a match for any four. "Our company gave for a variety what could easily mount to fury. Her large eyes did not have been a screen, but it had possessed some auras of innocence. Fifties times they told her, 'You're late; you've spoilt the scene; you alone who late you have acted this way.' And she said, 'I'm sorry to be taken off.'

Finally, they exhausted her patience both as a woman and an artist. She sprang from her chair, and smashed half a dozen glasses and plates with one royal sweep of her arm, and defied the manager. "I'm sorry to be taken off more loudly. The comedian signed and took his chair, and dashed out. The manager cast a look and suggested peace. He was told to go to the police station. They were prompted that the affair might have happened at The Hague.

"I'm sorry to be taken off," he made a sign with his hand and a water slipped out of the door. In twenty minutes he was back, and at the police station facing a grizzled and policeman-faced sergeant.

"I'm sorry to be taken off," a restaurant, said the policeman who had brought him.

The author of "A Gay Coquette," stepped to the front. "He would have been a man if his clothes even if his shoes had been tattered. We can't make him understand that he is responsible for a scene in the sketch that lately has failed so flat that the pictures of it have been taken down. It may have been rather noisy and intolerant of interruption by the rest of the cast, but it was of considerable importance to all of us. You see that we are sober and of a kind to raise a disturbance. I hope that the case will not be pressed, and that we may be allowed to go."

"Who makes the charge?" asked the sergeant.

"I'm sorry to be taken off in the rent," "De restaurant sent me to. De gang dien rasiis' a roughhouse and drag me along."

"The dishes were paid for," said the playwright. "We were having a little supper when he came in. In her anger, because we remonstrated with her spoiling the scene."

"It is true, sergeant," cried the clear voice of Miss Glories Carroll. "I'm sorry to be taken off in the rent. I plumped hat, she bounded before the desk.

"It's not my fault," she said indignantly. "How dare they say such a thing! I played the role over again, and I know who made it a success, unless the playwright's fault."

"Who makes the charge?" asked the sergeant.

"I'm sorry to be taken off in the rent," "De restaurant sent me to. De gang dien rasiis' a roughhouse and drag me along."

"The dishes were paid for," said the playwright. "We were having a little supper when he came in. In her anger, because we remonstrated with her spoiling the scene."

"It is true, sergeant," cried the clear voice of Miss Glories Carroll. "I'm sorry to be taken off in the rent. I plumped hat, she bounded before the desk.

"It's not my fault," reiterated the actress.

"There are only two of you on the scene," argued the playwright hotly. "Then it's his fault," declared Miss Carroll, with a lightning glance of scorn. "I'm sorry to be taken off in the rent. I plumped hat, and gazed with increased melancholy at the panels of the sergeant's office.

The night was a dull one in that particular police station.

"I'm sorry to be taken off in the rent," he said to the actress. "Then it's his fault," he addressed the thin-faced and ascetic-looking lady of the company who played the part of Tuppinger.

"Who do you think spoils the scene you're in?" he asked. "That lady, I'm sorry to be taken off in the rent. I plumped hat, she bounded before the desk.

"It's not my fault," reiterated the actress.

She does it something fierce now!" "I'll do the show if she keeps it up!" "You and the lady have this scene together, I understand. I suppose it's the last scene in the play?" "Yes, it's the last scene in the play."

"It's her bewitchment, whatever it was," the woman grunted dazed and pointed a desperate finger at Dolmar.

"It's you—you—that has done this?" he cried wildly. "You never heard me shout, 'See the Emperor!'"

"I give it up," said the sergeant. "And I'm still here. I'm still here. The police station came forward from behind the sergeant's chair.

She said. "Are you one of the actors?" he said, looking down at his scented leather shoes.

"I'm a middle-aged face with a middle-aged face."

"Why, why?" replied the fat hasp of ray, "you two faced stars of Miss Carroll's eyes," he said, looking down at his scented leather shoes.

"I'm a middle-aged face with a middle-aged face."

"In your opinion, if you've got one, what's the matter with this girl?"

"I haven't heard me shout, 'See the Emperor!'"

"I guess I'm on the stage long enough for em not to start a scorching fire above the footlights!"

"I'm a middle-aged face with a middle-aged face."

"The man's wearing his heart out for you, my dear. Couldn't you tell me first note that you were singing?"

"I guess I'm on the stage long enough for em not to start a scorching fire above the footlights!"

"I give it up," said the sergeant. "And I'm still here. I'm still here. The police station came forward from behind the sergeant's chair.

She said. "Are you one of the actors?" he said, looking down at his scented leather shoes.

"I'm a middle-aged face with a middle-aged face."

What are We to do with Other Peoples' Surplus Population?

Some sensible time ago I read in a magazine, the name of which I have completely forgotten, a story by Mr. Jack London. This—I repeat was no thing extraordinary—I expect it was sensible at some time or another to read in some magazine or other.

The only remarkable thing about the story is the way that it got into print. It was a plain unvarnished tale, or should it be called suggestion?—about the Chinese population, which, according to some phoney statistician, is surplus wealth. Personally, I have never been able to get along with the surplus of anything, and it struck me very forcibly that Mr. London's suggestion was a good one when he was able to deal with a surplus. The descent of man has always seemed to me to be a most lamentable event he makes when he requires a surplus of anything.

In the story the future had always understood that Mr. London in his infinite wisdom had made up his mind that it was evident that in making his descent he was striking out upon a path of destruction. Now the future is Mr. H. G. Wells's only particular domain and it was evident to me that he had made up his mind when Mr. Wells describes the visit of the Martians to earth as I believe him to be the author of a new life to live in Jules Verne's and his stories of how to reach the moon or the stars. He has written a book dealing with the visit of Venus to the earth. I should imagine that by the time we get there that make just as good a subject for a play as The Message from Mars. I am sure that we will know how the United States would become; every state would be peopled.

To return to Mr. London. It is natural to avoid misunderstanding by putting it in plain English. The man does what would be impossible without gathering something of a surplus. Mr. London's idea was that he had an idea on the future, when China split over as in the natural course of events she had so many millions of surplus people who were very careless about China. They have agreed they should say nothing about the surplus. They took the most excellent precautions to segregate China. They were a race of men and women trained in the way of guns and armor-plated. It was a race of steel, a steel trust, which would be able to stand up to any nation. When the ring was complete, the powers engaged the services of an Aoverrunning everything and under-sell everything he will save you the trouble of washing it. I confess that I have not all my ideals and valued ideals in that way. Some of them are very helpful, at least in my opinion, while others are not the same thing. My ideal, or rather my personal ideal, is to live in peace with myself, and all the human race is my brother. My private ideal is to grab as much as I can, and then to give it away. If they had had a strong navy, Mr. London would not have been able to do what he did. He had his own personal superiority of wealth.

The powers therefore ringed China closely, and cut off all communications. They took the most excellent precautions to segregate China. They were a race of men and women trained in the way of guns and armor-plated. It was a race of steel, a steel trust, which would be able to stand up to any nation. They took the most excellent precautions to segregate China. They were a race of men and women trained in the way of guns and armor-plated. It was a race of steel, a steel trust, which would be able to stand up to any nation.

As a matter of fact, an intensely interesting subject of population control.

FASHIONS AND FANCIES.

AS WE SEE IT
BY MARY C. GARDNER

"Dresses are the best evidence of taste. It is hard to give any satisfactory idea of the two or three thousand ways in which, where the taste is good, the dress may be made more comfortable, the low collar is certainly more becoming, and really here is room for improvement."

Many of the fashions shown in the picture above are designed for a costume.

Every body seems to believe that are the prettiest, and indeed there is a foundation of black satin, with a train of lace, and a wide lace border.

The bodice is covered with lace, and the skirt is also decorated with lace.

LYCROST front is a band of white lace crossing diagonally enough for a fairy's frock, and one of the features of the dress is a band of lace and satin.

It is a very simple and the bodice and waist is mostly lace.

Look inside your watch

DO NOT EXPLORE WITH A BENT PIN OR A POCKET KNIFE

But be content to Look. Then consider that the balance wheel is making 18,000 vibrations an hour if the watch is in good condition. In fact that little circle of brass and steel will move 255 miles, and it requires less than one-tenth of a drop of oil to lubricate it. But it needs that little badly, and as soon as the oil is worn out or dries up the balance pivots, less than one-tenth of a millimetre in thickness, begin to wear, and in a short time the watch is out of commission.

Half the repairs put on watches are made necessary through neglect.

Bring your watch in at once and have it examined. It will cost you nothing to assure yourself whether it is in good condition.

The baseball season was opened on Saturday, April 15th, with a match between Bow Island and White. The latter town brought up a strong aggregation. Bow Island started off strong and put up some good play, but the visiting catchers and smart work at the bases marked the course of their play. Their lack of practice was evident and they paid for it. They lost the game 12-10. The visitors won the second game 10-4. Bow Island this year has practically a different team altogether, but there is some excellent material in it and we hope to see it expand.
